I have a member portal using PHP. I have set up session timeout. If the user is inactive for more than 30 minutes, the session will be expired. If the user clicks a link while the session is expired, the user gets logged out and redirected to the login page. To handle this scenario, I set up an event observer that checks to see if the session is expired and if it is, redirect the user back to the login page with a redirect message that says the session has expired. This works fine. What I am not sure about is what to do in the event of a user clicking the link to login while the session is expired? The reason I ask this is because I am going to be handling a lot of login links and I want to make sure that my code is efficient. It seems that if I redirect the user back to the login page when I detect the session is expired, I would end up redirecting the user back to the login page every time the user clicks a login link because the session was already expired. A: If you don't want to leave the user logged in after the session expires you can use the following: `session_set_cookie_params(3600);` As you can see there are two timeout settings: A session inactivity timeout, and a login timeout. So when the user logs in and the session is active and the session is not expired, you can use the following.

session_start(); $_SESSION['myusername'] = 'testuser'; if (!isset($_SESSION['myusername'])) { session_destroy(); header("Location: "); exit(); }
if ($_SESSION['myusername']!= 'testuser') { header("Location: ");
