Bacillaria, Bifidobacteria, Corynebacteria, and the Clostridia are representatives of the Gram-positive bacteria. The Gram-positive cell wall, the natural layer of these bacteria, consists of Gram-positive bacteria (including also Bacillaria, Bifidobacteria, and Corynebacteria) have a natural layer, the Gram-positive cell wall, which consists of peptidoglycan monomeric units, mainly muropeptides. Muropeptides, are comprised of long chains of amino acids linked by peptide bonds. The main muropeptide groups in the Gram-positive cell wall are the dipeptides, with the following general structure: MDPGMεAεDG. The muropeptides contain polar groups, such as carboxyl, amino, phosphate and sulfate groups, and hydrophobic groups such as α-amino, β-amino, α-hydroxy, β-hydroxy, carboxyl, hydroxyl and methyl groups. Muropeptides have different composition depending on the Gram-positive bacteria species. The muropeptides present in the Gram-positive cell wall have amino acids containing polar groups (hydroxyl, carboxyl) and hydrophobic groups (methyl, α-amino, β-amino). It is known that cell walls of Gram-positive bacteria contain, among others, murope
