Anticoagulation in pregnancy complicated by inherited thrombophilia: a multicentre study. The management of anticoagulation in women taking oral anticoagulant therapy during pregnancy is a challenge. Our objective was to evaluate the safety of anticoagulation with vitamin K antagonists in pregnancy complicated by inherited thrombophilia (IT). We conducted a prospective, multicentre, open-label study in 15 centres. Pregnancy outcomes and bleeding-related events were recorded. Main outcomes were rates of fetal loss, major bleeding, and arterial thromboembolism. Overall, 80 pregnancies in 52 women were reported (57.6±12.6 years old). Prothrombin gene mutation (44.6%), factor V Leiden (36.4%), and activated protein C resistance (12.5%) were the most frequent thrombophilias. Median time since previous pregnancy was 12 months (interquartile range, 5.5-19.0). All were exposed to the recommended level of anticoagulation. There were no fetal deaths, and only one (1.3%) thromboembolic event occurred. Major bleeding events were reported in only one case (1.2%). A total of eight women (14.5%) had venous thromboembolic events. In conclusion, the management of anticoagulation with vitamin K antagonists during pregnancy was safe in women with IT.

The ECHO understands a number of impressed members of the Blues boardroom at Goodison on Saturday night, who have identified Allardyce and UEFA's Technical Director, Hans-Joachim Watzke as the two perfect candidates to take over from Martinez in the summer. Allardyce is one of the favourites to be offered the role of manager as the potential threat of new owners increases and the Everton boardroom realise that they need to act fast in appointing
