With the 2016 NBA Draft less than two months away, the action has already begun. Teams are preparing for the 2016 NBA Draft by getting their 2019 NBA Draft prospects evaluated. Through their first two weeks on campus, Team College Basketball has already seen their prospects get evaluated by experts at their respective institutions. To cap off their first two weeks of evaluation, ESPN's "College GameDay" is heading to College of Charleston on Tuesday, March 14 as the Buccaneers attempt to return to the NCAA Tournament for the third time in five years. The guard is a physical guard with the size and athleticism to defend multiple positions, and his versatility provides him with a unique skill set. He could play either guard position for a full-time starter, but he will likely end up as the starter at the point guard position. His ball-handling ability and his ability to make plays with his quick first step make him a player teams will be looking to select in the top half of the
