The U.S. military has offered to help Venezuelan opposition leader Juan Guaido with humanitarian aid, according to a letter that was sent to Congress Monday. Gen. Joseph Votel, the head of U.S.

Central Command, wrote to House Armed Services Committee Chairman Adam Smith that he was "directing all of our humanitarian efforts in Venezuela" to support Guaido. "We remain ready to support and continue to facilitate assistance for those in need within Venezuela," Votel wrote. The move comes after U.S. officials signed a deal with members of Guaido's coalition this past weekend to offer to provide aid to those in need across the border in Colombia. "The move was still being determined Monday, and U.S. agencies did not immediately deliver food or medical supplies on Venezuelan soil," Reuters reports. "We are ready to use the port of Maracaibo, but we didn't receive any agreement from the government," Guaido told The Associated Press. "We have no problem using international law to deliver humanitarian aid." Members of the opposition coalition have been authorized by Guaido to coordinate aid deliveries across the border in Colombia, and they delivered aid into Venezuela on Saturday. Trump administration officials were optimistic last week that the aid would be delivered on the ground in Venezuela by Sunday, but that deadline was missed. Guaido said on Saturday that he was "deeply concerned" about the safety of opposition activists and other groups involved in the aid effort. "We are demanding from the international community to put pressure on Maduro to stop these brutal acts and remove the sabotaging, but we are also demanding from the opposition that they not

Cell migration is a hallmark of epithelial-mesenchymal transition (EMT) and metastasis. In the study described here we show that EGF induces a significant increase in phosphatase-1 (PP1) catalytic activity in several lines of epithelial cells that display enhanced EMT. The increased PP1 activity is responsible for the dephosphorylation of the focal adhesion-associated proteins p130 and paxillin as well as actin in response to EGF stimulation. This stimulation in turn results in increased cell migration. Furthermore, pharmacological inhibition of PP1 activity impairs the EGF-induced migration in cells that exhibit increased EMT. The decreased PP1 activity results in a more phosphorylated and more actin-cytoskeletal-associated paxillin, which does not stimulate cell migration. Surprisingly, pharmacological inhibition of the PP2A catalytic activity had the opposite effect on paxillin, resulting in an increase in cell migration. This study identifies a novel role of PP1 and PP2A in EMT and migration. PP1 was found to negatively regulate EGF-induced cell migration, while PP2A was found to positively regulate this process.
