Riccardo Sacco Fausto Saleri Matematica Numerica.pdf Acute pulmonary disease with eosinophilia and increased serum IgE levels is common in horses with chronic colic. The objective of this study was to determine the incidence of horses with eosinophilia and increased serum IgE levels (SIgE) in horses admitted with chronic colic and to determine whether these disorders are associated with other clinical findings. A retrospective study was performed on horses in which a diagnosis of chronic colic was established. Horses in the control group were healthy horses of similar age and sex admitted for various reasons with no history of previous colic. The percentage of eosinophils, the serum IgE level and the clinical outcome were evaluated. Clinical signs in horses with chronic colic were gastrointestinal signs (69.4%) and abdominal pain (52.4%). Thirty percent (37/117) of the horses had SIgE. The median serum IgE level was 10 times higher in horses with SIgE compared with the control group.
